This publication is supported by the Steps to a HealthierUS Cooperative Agreement Program of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).
Its contents do not necessarily represent the official view of HHS.

The Arizona Policy Training Institute is limited to 300 participants on a first come, first serve basis. The following people are encouraged to attend: persons working with grass roots groups/coalitions, persons who can influence and work with organizational/systems change, volunteer or non-profit health educators and community advocates [Community Health Workers (CHWs)/Promotores; Community Health Representatives (CHRs)], Tribal Representatives, Program Staff.

Training Description

The purpose of this interactive training is to help participants understand the roles of changing organizational practices and policies in achieving norms changes in communities. Norms change is essential for achieving sustainable outcomes in efforts aimed at promoting positive health behaviors including, but not limited to reducing exposure to secondhand smoke, increasing healthy eating and physical activity, and controlling diabetes, and asthma. The training will equip participants with tools and the framework needed to engage in systematic planning and implementation of policy-focused interventions as they progress through multi-year projects. Further, effective collaboration is critical for advancing comprehensive approaches, which are often beyond the purview of any single agency or organization. Training activities will be structured to encourage interaction and group learning within and across communities.

Learning Objectives

1. Understand the value of changing policies and organizational practices to prevent illness and injury.
2. Improve skills in communicating the importance of organizational practice and policy change to coalition and community members.
3. Have an initial familiarity with the Spectrum of Prevention, a tool for developing comprehensive prevention strategies that result in norms change.
4. Develop new contacts and receive peer-to-peer support within geographic regions and across issue areas.
5. Increase familiarity with strategies and activities within Arizona in key areas: diabetes, cancer control, nutrition, physical activity, asthma, tobacco use, oral health, and injury prevention.

Breakout Session 1:

Influencing policies and practices within domains

Participants will have the opportunity to select a specific domain within which they are interested in influencing policies and organizational practices. You will not be required to sign up prior to the training for a specific domain breakout group. However, we encourage you to think strategically ahead of time about which domain breakout group you would most like to participate in. The domains to choose from include:

Schools: work that occurs in Arizona's public and private education settings serving children in grades K-12.

Community Nutrition and Community Physical Activity: work being done to change systems in city and county government to improve access to healthy foods, walking, biking and parks and playgrounds. This also includes working with community-based organizations and business partners to create healthy environments.

Healthcare System: work intended to influence professionals who provide advice, service, or referral for the physical and mental health of individuals (including mainstream and alternative physicians, dental, and pharmaceutical providers and their staff) to promote changes in clinical practice and facilities/institutions, and to engage professionals as advocates.

Worksite: includes all places where people are employed. This functionally overlaps with schools, communities, and healthcare, but policy and organizational practice change work included in this domain is intended to protect workers rather than visitors or customers.

Native American Communities: This breakout will provide Native American communities and those who work, partner, or contract with them an opportunity to discuss policy and systems change within their unique political system; across schools, communities, healthcare systems, and worksites.

Breakout Session 2:

Collaborating to achieve policy and organizational practice change

Participants will be assigned to breakout groups according to the geographic region in which they work.
